5. This entire ordination service may be found in any Prayer Book of the Church of England or the Protestant Episcopal Church of our own country. Bishop Westcott, towards the close of his life, speaking to clergymen ordained with such solemn vows as these, gave an exhortation that seems almost prophetic, one we need to hearken to today even more than when the words were uttered: "I charge you, then, to prize and use your peculiar spiritual heritage which was most solemnly committed to you at your ordination. Our English Church represents in its origin and in its growth the study of the Bible. In the study of the Bible lies the hope of its future. For the study of the Bible in the sense in which I have indicated is a momentous importance at the present time, and it is rare; there is much discussion about the Bible, but, as I fear, little knowledge of it. . . . Our hearts again constantly fail us for fear of the things which are coming on the world. The Bible inspires us with an unfailing hope. We are yet further perplexed by conflicts of reasoning, by novelties of doctrines, by strange conclusions of bold controversialists. The Bible provides us with a sure touchstone of truth, while
The intellectual power, through words and things, Goes sounding on, a dim and perilous way, and brings us back to a living fellowship with Him who is the Truth."
